Ruther Glen, Virginia based Steadfast Tree Care is reaching out to the community to share insights on the importance of tree removal and how to do it correctly. With this, the company continues its efforts to educate and support the community, a mission that has always been a core part of its operations. The article itself, titled 'The Importance of Tree Removal in Ruther Glen and How To Do It Right', is available here: https://steadfasttree.care/tree-removal-in-ruther-glen/.

Philip Wood, a representative of Steadfast Tree Care, states, "There are many reasons why you should remove a tree on your property, though nothing about this decision should be taken lightly. There are several aspects that you need to consider before removing the tree, all to avoid putting you or your family in danger. Among these decisions, picking the right company for the job is an important one. Further, being familiar with the process and understanding the right way to remove a tree should help you make the right decisions."

According to Steadfast Tree Care, the first and most important decision that local homeowners need to make is whether they should actually remove the tree in question on their own. They explain that, while there are instances when it is beneficial to remove trees as do-it-yourself jobs, this depends on several factors, such as the type of tree and its characteristics. The decision usually comes down to whether the tree endangers the integrity of any of the houses in the vicinity, either through their frailty or disruptive roots.

A common example of this are cottonwood trees, which are rather frail despite being fairly common all over the US. This tree species can grow up to 6 feet or more in height per year. This puts them at risk for having weaker, more porous wood than other types of trees, and they have a propensity to fall victim to infestations and rotting as well as break more easily. In addition, their root systems are likely to spread where they should not and tear underground objects, like pipes, apart. All of this makes cottonwood trees common candidates for removal.

These risk factors are the most common causes for tree removals. Though complicated, a professional tree removal company should be able to address these issues. Wood says, "This is what we refer to when we talk about the right way to remove a tree, as this is a project that goes beyond simply cutting it down. Invasive tree roots are a common problem for homeowners as well as commercial settings, and tree root problems are not always solved by the removal of the tree because the stump or remaining roots may continue to grow. Proper tree removal procedure should also take care of the root system so it does not become problematic."

The company explains that tree roots can expand for dozens of meters away from the stump. This makes getting rid of them a difficult task, and one of the main reasons why DIY tree removal projects are so complicated.
