Eagle Production Co Launches Virtual Events Studio

September 22, 2020

Brick Township, New Jersey - September 22, 2020 -
Eagle Production Co., an events company that produces events across the United States, has announced that in response to lockdowns, they have built a virtual event studio for livestreaming events. While they have always offered and are experts at on-site video production that can be broadcast, and they still provide it, they now also have a location that clients can come to and house their events in-house with props, lightshows, and more. They have held a soft launch about two months ago, testing the concept with some of their entertainment partners, and now it has been perfected and they are ready to take clients in house.

Shaya Adler, founder and CEO of Eagle Production Co., says, ?Aside from the usefulness of virtual events during lockdowns, the rise of livestreaming for events can?t be ignored. These days, it?s how you connect directly with your audience. And make sure your guests don?t miss a thing. Creating those connections is how Eagle virtual event service lets your event soar.?

He continues, ?Creating immersive and engaging online experiences combines the human connection with modern technology. It brings every viewer together through interactive technology. Reach your event?s maximum potential by creating an online experience. At Eagle Production, we think your event deserves it.?

Even without lockdowns, broadcasting online is an effective way to increase attendance. This is because attendance to the event will no longer be limited by the number of available seats. Clients would be able to showcase what their event has to offer and boost future attendance with the use of professional livestreaming.

The team from Eagle Production Co. can ensure that the event will be effective and impressive both on-site and online. This event livestreaming service can be used for both business or entertainment events. Clients would have access to the company?s entire warehouse of events equipment, such as lighting, sound, and AV equipment. This virtual event production service is available for all sizes of events, from the large-scale specialized events.

Shaya Adler says, ?We approach virtual events like everything else. We create bespoke solutions based on your needs. Your online goals are a key piece of the puzzle. We understand when and how to use technology for maximum impact. More importantly, we know exactly where it fits in the overall scheme of a successful event - your successful event.?

The first thing that the team at Eagle Production will do is planning and design, which requires them to truly understand the client?s objectives so that the event can be mapped based on those goals. They will be developing a comprehensive roadmap for the event and the live streams are customized based on the event?s goals.

Next, they will tackle the needs of the virtual event with regards to technology and logistics. Because of their extensive experience, they fully understand the various ins and outs of the industry, and how to take advantage of that knowledge to truly impress the attendees. Specifically, they are knowledgeable on which virtual event solutions will be best for a particular event, such as HD streaming, on-site directing, microphones, lavaliers, production lighting, projection mapping, interactive events, studio staging, and guest engagement.

And then there is the management and execution part of the virtual event. Once again, they have the advantage of having the appropriate knowledge and experience on how to dictate the pace and how to direct the people who are needed in the event. They will monitor and keep track of the various components of the event and the client can focus on his or her role.

And finally, there is the production and promotion for the virtual event. Their team is capable of building up the hype before a virtual event and then showcasing it after. All of that will be taken care of, including virtual production.
