Video Chat a Pro has announced a new blog post in their How to DIY with Video Chat a Pro resource section. The new blog post covers the various ways you can use household products to dissolve hair in a shower drain and can be viewed by clicking here. The newest blog post addition to the DIY with Video Chat a Pro section also discusses other ways to remove hair from a shower drain if dissolving it doesn?t work.

Video Chat a Pro is a livestreaming platform based in Lago Vista, Texas but serving homeowners and Do It Yourselfers across the country. Video Chat a Pro?s Livestream DIY Feature connects people with licensed tradesmen through their smartphones. The skilled professionals can diagnose the problem from the camera on your smart phone and give advice in real time that is specific to your situation and the tools you have available. This provides anyone taking on a big DIY project or some daunting repairs with the ability to consult a trained professional with years of experience from the convenience of their smartphone.

Using Video Chat a Pro doesn?t even require you to download any apps or install any programs. Just visit their Livestream DIY Section by clicking here and you can browse the available plumbers, electricians, mechanics, appliance repairman, HVAC technicians and landscapers ready to take your call and assist you in any way necessary.

For those that consider themselves to be rather handy and would rather attempt repairs, installations or DIY projects on their own, Video Chat a Pro has a new resource section called How to DIY with Video Chat a Pro, or DIYwVCAP for short. DIYwVCAP is filled with How Tos on a variety of subjects in fields ranging from plumbing and electrical work to car repair, appliance repair and irrigation installation.

Video Chat a Pro also works with local businesses across the country to give them the ability to offer livestreamed estimates by video chat. This allows customers in need of repairs or installations to get precise estimates for the fraction of a cost without having to let a stranger into their home. These live video chat estimates also save time and frustration for local companies because they can diagnose the problem before they arrive, so when they come for their scheduled appointment, they can be fully prepared and fix the problem the first time.

?With coronavirus changing pretty much everything about our lives, our society and our norms, I wanted to create something that would make things easier and better for everyone involved,? Jason Bauder, the founder of Video Chat a Pro said. ?Homeowners can come to our DIYwVCAP section to read How Tos on a variety of subjects, DIYers can get personalized, professional advice on their projects for a fraction of the cost of an in-home visitation and a thousand times the quality of some article on the internet. And don?t forget, tradesmen who have been hit hard by the economic downturn have opportunities for remote work, and local businesses can provide customers with precise estimates without having to send anyone anywhere. That sounds like a lot of wins to me.?

Any readers interested in exploring some easy at-home How Tos can visit the DIYwVCAP section on the Video Chat a Pro website. Those looking for livestream in-home estimates from local businesses or livestream DIY video chats from licensed professional tradesmen can simply visit the home page at www.videochatapro.com.
