A client of Remington Tattoo Parlor will need to undergo a tattoo consultation process. Once they receive an email or a call from a client, they will schedule a 30- to 60-minute consultation to discuss the client?s tattoo vision and reference images. Clients are requested to bring pictures that represent their inspiration for their desired tattoo. The goal of this consultation process is to ensure that the artist and the client?s vision for the tattoo are aligned, including costs, timeline, and designs. After the design and concept for the tattoo have been finalized, they will then schedule the client?s appointment and accept the deposit. Depending on the type and size of the tattoo that the client wants, the project may be divided into several tattooing sessions.

One of the tattoo artists at Remington Tattoo Parlor is Terry Ribera, who has been tattooing since 2001. He was born in the San Francisco Bay Area and has mostly specialized in cover up tattoos. He explains, ?My interest in Art Nouveau, Illustrative Tattoo work, Biomechanical, Japanese and Asian tattooing has allowed me to grow as an artist and become one of San Diego?s best tattoo artists. My distinct and instantly recognizable style has been a culmination of many years of hard work and study. Today, I spend much of my free time Painting in Oil and showing my work in various galleries across the country.?

Another one of the tattoo artists at the Remington Tattoo Parlor is Sarah Genereux. She was born and raised in New Jersey and she has been tattooing professionally for 15 years. She believes that she is a versatile artist and enjoys working on pieces in different styles. Her passions include being a great mom to her children, all forms of art, surfing, and tattooing.

Chris Cockrill has been a professional tattoo artist for 14 years. He says, ?I do several styles of custom tattooing with a main focus of making clean readable designs that are tattoo friendly and will age well.
