Aaron Kosins MD, a reputable plastic surgeon in Newport Beach, CA, has announced that he is offering breast augmentation using advanced breast implant devices. He wants to point out that his primary goal is to understand the patient's preferences in terms of breast size, the placement of the incision, and the overall appearance of the breast, including cleavage, upper pole fullness, and nipple position. He makes use of advanced breast implants to achieve the desired appearance of the breasts, such as the Natrelle® breast implants. These implants have recently been made available and they offer the benefit of having a wide range of sizes and projections that will all provide a soft feel.

Aaron Kosins MD explains, "Breast augmentation is a procedure that enlarges the size of your breasts and is one of the most popular procedures in the United States. This is done with the use of silicone or saline implants typically placed below the muscle of your chest wall. Placing an implant under your breast tissue will enlarge your current breast, however, an implant itself will do very little to change the shape of your breast or nipple-areola position. Using current techniques and technologies, my patients can expect to return to normal social activities and be out to dinner or shopping the same night as their breast augmentation."

Dr. Kosins wants to point out that the Newport Beach breast augmentation service that he provides will require a number of key decisions that will affect the patient's breast for the rest of her life. His goal is to achieve the best possible breast shape and size while also balancing what the patient's breast tissues will allow him to do. Certain sizes and shapes of implants can be accommodated by the patient's breast depending on her breast envelope and tissue quality. Surpassing those limits may result in a "breast handicap" for the patient for life.

It should also be noted that breast implants will need to be changed every 10 years on the average. This is why the first or primary breast augmentation procedure is extremely important to understand what the patient is really asking for and what the surgeon can deliver.

For the location of the incision, Dr. Kosins uses either below the breast or around the areola. Each kind of incision has its own pros and cons and these can be discussed with the patient during the consultation. Overall, he will aim to ensure that the incision will allow for maximum sterility and meticulous dissection.

For most women, Dr. Kosins places the breast implant under the muscle in a "dual-plane" manner to permit optimal coverage of the implant and protection of the overlying breast tissue. The size of the implant is also an important factor to consider. He will take a number of measurements of the chest and skin quality to be able to decide what size of implant is appropriate to accomplish what the patient wants to achieve.

And the last important decision would be whether to use silicone or saline implants. Dr. Kosins has experience in using both types and how to form stable implants. This will allow him to make a decision on what is appropriate for the patient.

It should also be noted that breast augmentation is an outpatient procedure and is performed under general anesthesia. By applying the most up to date technologies and methods, majority of Dr. Kosins' patients are able to return home the same evening. Most patients can control their pain with over the counter meds.
