

Introducing Blender Base for Blender-related News, Reviews, Blogs

September 08, 2015

September 08, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Blender Base, a blog for information on kitchen blenders for both personal and professional use, has launched a new, in-depth and informative Website on the subject of all things blender-related. It offers a wide variety of useful and relevant information concerning which blender to buy for what kitchen setup, and for what purpose each variety of blender is intended. Through the use of blogs, advice columns, buying guides, and exhaustive reviews, readers are offered a broad assortment of input, with which the prospective buyer may come to an informed personal decision about which blender is right for them.

Blender Base offers exhaustively researched and in-depth information to back up all of the advice and suggestions presented on the Website. While the subject of the new blog is somewhat narrow in its focus, owner Taylor insists that the narrowly-defined niche doesn't make having a well-informed opinion prior to buying any less important. "I use my Vitamix every single morning. There isn't much better than a cold smoothie on a hot summer day," Taylor notes, adding that "the right blender can turn a tedious task into a job of just a few seconds, with quality results."

Blender Base's new Website is located at <http://www.blenderbase.com>; Website owner, blogger, and blender enthusiast Taylor would like to invite anyone who is currently in the market for a new blender to stop by and have a look. With prices on new blenders ranging from under one hundred dollars to well over one thousand, nobody wants to wind up with the wrong appliance sitting on their kitchen counter. For those interested in a compilation of recipes in which common household blenders play a major role, a free eBook is currently in the works, and will be available on the Website itself in the near future.
