

University HQ Releases the 55 Best Business School Degree Programs

October 05, 2020

October 05, 2020 -

University HQ, regarded as a leading higher learning resource center for undergraduate and graduate students, today released its list of the Top 55 College Business Degrees. The one-stop college and university resource center reports its Top 55 Business Program rankings through a proprietary rating system. The list features numerous colleges and universities with exceptional business degree programs.

University HQ compiled its list based on a number of variables acquired through published public information. The selection of data types was highly strategic and calculated regarding the overall education experience and opportunities for future employment. All visitors to the sites are welcome to examine the list without having to register with the website. Throughout the site, readers will also be able to find details regarding each college and university, information on careers in business, and additional relevant data.

Colleges and universities from nearly every region of the country are represented on the list. Various program sizes and both public and private higher learning institutions are also represented. Many of these business degrees are also accredited by the AACSB.

University HQ?s Top 55 College Business Programs List

Stanford University landed at the No. 1 ranking with help from programs dedicated to entrepreneurs and working professionals alike at all degree levels. Harvard University came in at a close No. 2 due to the undergraduate business preparation opportunities and in-demand, high-caliber graduate degrees.

The University of Pennsylvania is third on the list as the school has an extensive offering in business concentrations to meet the needs of nearly any student. The University of Virginia is No. 4, in part, due to the business school?s approach of hands-on experience and business theory teachings and the variety of business-related degrees available.

Northwestern University is No. 5 on the list featuring some of the best leadership degree programs and internship opportunities. Columbia University reached No. 6 due to the high-level of collaboration between program participants at all degree levels. The University of California at Berkeley comes in at No. 7 as the school offers an unprecedented number of business-related degrees for all.

The University of California at Los Angeles is at No. 8 with an expansive alumni network and top employer recruiting each year. The University of Chicago appears at No. 9 with help from the global representation of students and alumni, as well as global campus locations. And the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor rounds out the top 10, in part, due to the progressive business degree specialization offerings, such as social impact and sustainability.
