

Arrowhead Clinic Chiropractor Atlanta Explains What People Need to Do After a Car Accident in Atlanta

October 13, 2020

ATLANTA, GA - October 13, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Arrowhead Clinic Chiropractor Atlanta, a chiropractic clinic in Atlanta, GA, has announced that they have recently published a blog post that advises people on what to do after a car accident in Atlanta. The problem is that people who got involved in a car accident are likely to be experiencing a lot of emotions. Thus, the very first thing they need to do is to stay calm. This will allow them to access the situation correctly and determine what needs to be done.

For instance, if anybody is injured, it would be advisable to call 911 to ensure that an ambulance will arrive at the scene of the accident. It may also be a good idea to call the Atlanta police department to ensure that a police officer will get to the scene to allow the filing of an accident report. This will make sure that the victim of the accident will be able to get an official police report that will be submitted to the insurance firm. Police reports are critical pieces of evidence when the victim has to prove his or her case when making a claim. And if the car is still functioning, it is also advisable to remove it from the main road.

It is also a good idea to exchange information on names and insurance data with the other party. Such information would be vital when an accident investigation is made and when filing an injury claim. However, it is also advisable to limit interaction with the other driver in order to avoid accidental admission of guilt. A free app like the WreckCheck from The National Association of Insurance Commissioners may be used to record important information such as the name, address and contact info of the other driver; insurance data; license plate number for each party; contact info of witnesses; phone number of the other driver; police report number; photos of any damage; personal notes won what occurred during the accident; and name and telephone number of the policy officer.

Other things to do after an accident include: determining what insurance policy is applicable; contacting a personal injury lawyer; and consulting a chiropractor, such as one of the Arrowhead Clinic car accident chiropractors in Atlanta. It is important to remember that accident victims will need to seek medical attention first before consulting with a lawyer. Early care and treatment are essential for a fast recovery, especially after serious injuries.

One of the key services provided by Arrowhead Clinic Chiropractor Atlanta is to provide treatment to car accident injury victims. They have been offering this kind of treatment for almost 40 years and are leaders in this particular field. Chiropractic treatment is especially suitable to accident-related injuries because most often, the kind of injuries is known as soft tissue injuries. When a person gets involved in a collision, the forces can cause the body, including the spinal cord, to become misaligned. Aligning the spine for optimal health is what chiropractors do best.

Treatment will vary for each type of injury and each patient. The patient's health and age will also be considered when it comes to developing an individualized treatment plan. The chiropractor will discuss the treatment plan thoroughly with the patient so that the patient may fully comprehend the healing process. All of the chiropractic treatments will include some alignment that causes a crack, snap, or popping noise.

Through the chiropractic treatment, accident victims may be able to experience relief from pain and get their mobility back to normal. Chiropractic treatment may also promote long term healing. An important advantage of chiropractic care is that there would be no need for pain medication. The benefits of chiropractic care include: the fact that it is non-invasive treatment, decrease in inflammation, identification of not-so-obvious injuries, restoration of range of motion, prevention of long-term pain, reduction of scar tissue, and improvement of the chance for a successful claim.

Those who would like to know more about the benefits of chiropractic treatments after an auto accident may want to check out the Arrowhead Clinic Chiropractor Atlanta website, or call them on the telephone or contact them through email.

After a car accident, you will probably be overwhelmed with emotion. The very first thing you should do after you've been in a car accident in Atlanta is to stay calm. Knowing what to do after an accident is relatively straightforward, but it's not always easy when emotions run high. Keeping your calm after the automobile accident will help you document the wreck more thoroughly and accurately. You can use the tips below to prepare yourself to handle the stressful aftermath of a car accident to ensure your recovery and make the claims process more efficient and effective.

Move To A Safe Area and Check For Injuries

After your car accident, you should immediately check for injuries. If you or anyone else involved in the accident is injured, call 911 to get an ambulance on the scene. You should also call the Atlanta police department to get a police officer at the scene of the accident so they can file an accident report. This ensures that you get an official police report that you can give to your insurance company. Police reports are often crucial pieces of evidence when proving your case. If your vehicle is still operational, get it off the main road. Document the Accident and Protect Evidence

Takes pictures of the accident scene, the vehicles involved, everyone involved, and anything else that might help explain the how and why of the accident. Pictures taken as soon as possible are most valuable. If you don't have a camera for some reason, see if a passenger or bystander can take photos for you. Be sure to take pictures of the damage done to all vehicles. Snap a few pictures of the other party's license plate and evidence like street signs, lights, skid marks, etc. Once you are in touch with an attorney after your accident, be sure to tell them about any other evidence you think might be necessary. Things like faulty street lights or signage, malfunctioning equipment like your seat belts, turn signals, and weather conditions, can all be essential information.

Exchange Information

After an accident in Atlanta, Georgia all parties should exchange names and insurance information with each other. This way an accident investigation and injury claim can be defined properly. While you might want to talk in-depth about the accident, it's best to limit your interaction with the other driver so you don't accidentally admit guilt. You'll want to get as much information as you can, including:

- * Name, address, and contact information of the other driver..
- * Insurance Information
- * Each Parties License Plate Number
- * The other driver's phone numbers.
- * Witness contact information.
- * Photos of any damage.
- * Police report number.
- * Police officer's name and telephone number.
- * Personal notes on what happened during the incident.

If you have a smartphone, The National Association of Insurance Commissioners offers WreckCheck, a free app that records information like the time of the accident, and lets you create written and audio details. Once you're done it emails everything to you or your agent. Also, many insurance companies offer a similar app, so your insurance company may offer a free smartphone app to help you document the crash's details. If you don't have a smartphone app, but you have a pen and paper handy, you can draw a diagram of the scene and make notes about how the accident occurred.

Determine What Insurance Applies

One of the biggest headaches after being involved in a car accident is dealing with insurance companies, knowing your insurance policy in full, and speaking with an insurance adjuster. How the insurance claims process shakes out for you after an accident depends on who was at fault and the types of insurance you and the other driver have. If the other driver was at fault, their property damage liability coverage will pay for repairs up to their policy's limit. Medical bills would be covered up to the limits of the negligent driver's bodily injury liability coverage. If the other driver is uninsured or they don't have enough coverage to pay your bills, your uninsured or underinsured motorist coverages would payout. The negligent driver's expenses will be handled similarly. Collision coverage will pay for repairs up to the vehicle's actual cash value, minus a deductible. Their injuries would be paid by medical payments coverage, or MedPay, working in tandem with health insurance coverage. Emergency roadside service comes in handy if you need a tow to the repair shop. This service is available with a AAA membership. Still, it's often cheaper to get emergency roadside service from your auto insurer. The only downside is that using it will count as a claim, and claims can cause your rates to go up. Rental car coverage pays for a rental while your car is in the shop. Be aware that you'll probably need collision and comprehensive coverage to add rental car reimbursement and emergency roadside service. Contact A Personal Injury Lawyer After serving our communities for over 40 years, the Arrowhead Clinic of Atlanta has learned that next to receiving prompt medical care, the most important thing to do after a car accident in Atlanta is to reach out to a personal injury law firm.??Personal injury attorneys are skilled in several practice areas, like wrongful death, trucking accidents, slip and fall cases, premises liability, and automobile accidents.??Anyone injured in auto accidents, truck accidents, motorcycle accidents, or any motor vehicle accidents will need the help of a personal injury attorney, especially if your injuries were due to the negligence of the other driver.??The Arrowhead Clinic can help you get in contact with a personal injury lawyer that can help you with your personal injury case.??The main goal of your car accident law firm will be to make sure you receive compensation that covers the expenses after your car wreck.??If you're injured in a car crash, you will need to be able to pay for things like your medical bills, the damage to your car, lost wages, and the pain and suffering resulting from your crash.??Personal injury laws are complicated and confusing. When dealing with physical injuries after your Atlanta car accident, the last thing you need to worry about is figuring out those laws and fighting with the at fault driver.??That's where your personal injury comes in after your car crash in Atlanta, GA.??If you intend to file a personal injury claim after your car accident, please don't do it alone.??Many people think that because they can use Google to search the internet, they can figure out how to represent themselves after their accident.??But during that Google search, you will likely find a lot of conflicting advice. One website will say something about car accidents, and then another might say the exact opposite.??After your accident in Georgia, you need to know exactly what to do, without confusion.??That's why you need to turn to the experts right away. If you come across a problem, they will know how to solve it.??Due to years of schooling, training, and experience handling car accidents, your motor vehicle accident attorney will know what steps to take following your accident.??For the best chance at a successful car accident case, find an experienced car accident law firm.??Fortunately, most car accident claims settle outside of court. And, if you have an experienced law firm on your side, you are much more likely to get a favorable settlement.??But if the at fault driver and their insurance company refuse to accept responsibility, your case could very well end up in court.??If this happens, you need an experienced Atlanta, GA car accident lawyer by your side the entire time.??When selecting the law firm to represent you, find one that takes the attorney client relationship seriously, and one that offers a free consultation. See A Chiropractor Even before you speak to your car accident lawyer, you need to seek medical attention to protect your overall well-being. That's where the Arrowhead Clinic comes in. After a car crash, early care and treatment are critical for a quick recovery, especially after serious injuries. The sooner you can get evaluated by a personal injury chiropractor, the sooner they can develop a treatment plan, the sooner you will be on the road to recovery. Even if you are in a seemingly minor auto accident, accident injuries often show up days or even weeks later. That's why you should always make sure to see your Atlanta Accident Chiropractor as soon as you can. Your chiropractor will adjust your spine if necessary and may recommend massage or foam roller techniques to help aid in relief from any pain or discomfort you may be having. They can also give nutritional counseling and prescribe exercises that will help aid in the healing process and help you regain full range of motion.
