Healthy Smiles Dental, a dental practice in Anchorage, Alaska, has released a new blog post that explains how people can avoid cupcake cravings. Most people will enjoy sweet treats from time to time, but some people experience cravings for something sweet like cupcakes and find themselves eating too much of them. Aside from the large number of calories that come with sugary treats, they also increase the risk of certain diseases, including tooth cavities.

The article explains that such cravings are due to sugar addiction because eating sugar stimulates the reward center of the brain. This results in a ?high? with the person experiencing high energy levels and enhanced mood. However, this is followed by a sugar crash with a resulting reduction in energy and a craving for more sugary treats. Fortunately, overcoming a sugar addiction is not as difficult as many people would think. The key is to slowly reduce sugar intake every day until the amount of sugar has reached an acceptable level. It is also possible to replace sweet snacks with healthy alternatives, such as cheese, nuts, fruit and vegetables.

It may also be a good idea to keep sugary treats out of sight, such as a box of chocolates or a box of cupcakes, to avoid eating all of them in just one day. Putting them behind other items or in a storage area that is not frequently used may help in keeping them out of sight. Those who are interested in reading more articles related to oral care can check out the Healthy Smiles Dental blog on the practice?s website at https://www.anchoragehealthysmiles.com/.

Meanwhile, the article advises people who find that their sweet cravings have resulted into tooth cavities, to consult with a dentist in Anchorage. It is advisable to have those cavities treated by a dentist because they could get worse over time. The dentist will clean the teeth and fill the cavities to protect the teeth and preserve the patient?s beautiful smile.
