Roofing projects can be one of the largest investments homeowners make with their property. Which is why it is important for home and building owners to have their roof inspected especially after major storms. Storm damage claims in many cases are time sensitive. Homeowner?s first step should be assessing their roof?s condition as soon as possible. Home and building owners may notice issues like leaks, damage to their roof's shingles or even hail damage to the roof. It may be in the best interest of homeowners to speak with their insurance adjuster or review their homeowner's insurance policy to determine what the requirements are for how long they need to wait after a natural disaster or severe storm to have the roof repaired or restored under their homeowner?s insurance roofing policy.

When working with Tri-State Exteriors and an insurance claim is involved, they can assist with filing the claim. In some cases, a homeowner could be eligible for a brand new roof paid for their insurance. Those interested to know if they qualify or would like to request an estimate should contact Tri-State Exteriors.
