

HDRG Shares Insight On The Importance Of Mac Data Recovery

November 20, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Hard Drive Recovery Group (HDRG), an Irvine, California-based data recovery service, is reaching out to share the importance of Mac data recovery services. Hard Drive Recovery Group is dedicated to providing high quality data recovery services to the residents of California and the surrounding areas.

Maureen Davies, a representative for Hard Drive Recovery Group, says, "For anyone who owns any type of gadget, the COVID-19 pandemic is even more frustrating than they may have first expected it to be. Many expected to only experience frustration with not being able to do their favorite outdoor activities, possibly believing that their video streaming services and so on would remain reliable. For the most part, this has been the case, but the devices you use to access these services tend to be more fallible. If your MacBook, for instance, decides it's not going to turn on one day, if you drop your iPad or if your iPhone is suddenly bricked, then you are in real trouble. In all likelihood, your ability to have it fixed will correspond directly with how easy it is for you to go outside. Your area may be in lockdown or local repair shops may be closed."

In a blog post titled "Where Do Broken iDevices (And Their Owners) Go??", Hard Drive Recovery Group looks at options for people who are dealing with broken iDevices in this turbulent time where most places are closed or require a high standard of safety. As the blog post points out, from March until around May, if an iPhone broke down, people were really without any options because many Apple stores were closed due to the lockdown or because they just went out of business. Then, in June, several commercial establishments opened, including Apple Stores, only for them to be closed again in July because of the fluctuating numbers of COVID-19 infections. The situation right now is that it is really every iUser for themselves when checking if the nearest store to them is open or closed. The schedules for most outlets, especially those in malls, are quite irregular, and no one can count on them actually staying open when they should be.

CNBC even shared a statement from an Apple spokesperson, who said, "Due to current COVID-19 conditions in some of the communities we serve, we are temporarily closing stores in these areas. We take this step with an abundance of caution as we closely monitor the situation, and we look forward to having our teams and customers back as soon as possible."

However, while there is a lot of uncertainty about official Apple stores, there are still options for iDevice owners. These include shipping the device to Apple, finding and going to an Apple Store that is still open, going to an authorized store or going to a repair shop. While users may balk at the thought of visiting an unofficial repair shop, they need not fear. As of late 2019, Apple has already allowed third party shops to fix broken iPhones or MacBooks. However, in the absolute worst case scenarios where repairing the device is not an option, users need to be aware of places that can help them carefully recover any and all important data that might have been saved on the device.

Hard Drive Recovery Group is one such company. Whether it's recovering data from a MacBook device or any model of the iPhone, the technicians at Hard Drive Recovery Group are able to successfully retrieve their customers' precious files. With over 20 years of experience in the industry, the company's team have come across all sorts of data recovery scenarios and have managed to help their customers get back important data - photos, videos, documents and more. In addition to dealing with Apple devices, the company is also well-versed in recovering data from and repairing both Windows and Android devices as well.
