All Systems Go Marketing, based in La Mesa, California, is taking the initiative to educate their clients and community on the basics of search engine optimization. The company has published a new blog post on their website titled "Back to Basics With SEO's Ingredients".

Search engine optimization (SEO) is an aspect of online marketing that all businesses should know how to use to their benefit. To quote the post, "After all, if your digital assets do not perform well on SEO and cannot be seen on the first page of search engine results, then your business will most likely not succeed. On the other hand, if your business comes out on top of search engine results, web users would most likely trust and engage with your business." The important fact to know is that SEO is not particularly difficult to implement. The post goes on to explain that, "What's great is that there are a wide array of tools that can help your business at getting better in SEO, and in turn, make your venture grow." For example, Google's Search Console, SEMrush, FatRank and Keywords Everywhere are tools designed to improve performance in the factors that shape SEO.

The post takes a look at what these factors are. One point is to research what keywords work. The algorithms of Google and other search engines are responsible for ranking web pages based on a number of factors, one of which are keywords. The post explains that, "Of course, the most popular keywords are already 'owned' by the world's most famous and biggest businesses, for the most part, because their brands are already keywords that web searchers actually use when they look for them on the internet."

Thus, if one's company is a small business that is just starting with local SEO, it is advisable to not assume that the company's brand is being searched for by web users on a large scale. The post advises one to try using, "keywords that are at least relevant to your business. Those words that rank higher when you run them through tools like FatRank will obviously benefit your business if you include them in your pages' content." This is why it is crucial to research which keywords related to the business are most likely to be searched on Google.

The post also asserts that, "Creating a DSA campaign is a cinch." Technically, one may add DSAs to a search campaign that is set to all features, but All Systems Go recommends creating standalone DSA campaigns. All one needs to do is set up dynamic ad targets, which are based on the site content. This is further explained in the post, which states that, "AdWords will use this data to identify a list of product categories. If a site is well-indexed, there are typically plenty of categories to choose from." This will allow a company to create their own brand based on a URL, page title or page content.

The post advises the reader to, "Provide valuable content that users can't see anywhere else." A business becomes more valuable if one can provide not just goods and services, but content related to them. Content may be in the form of product descriptions, written articles, blog posts, videos or photographs. This wide variety of possibilities means that one cannot have the excuse of running out of content. Content is key because it is what search engines examine in order to assign a ranking. If one's web pages provide good content, search engines will most likely rank the site high when a user looks for something that is related to the business in question. To quote the post, "That's already one huge foot in the door of a potential customer."

All Systems Go Marketing also points out that it is important to, "Build authority and relationships with links," which is explained in detail in the blog post. The post also goes on to elaborate on how, "Rich Snippet Search Results are now a thing," which, though relatively new, can be used by small businesses to great advantage. For example, if one searches for a business, Google snippets will show information about the business, including details such as the address and operating hours.
