Seattle, Wash. ? As a locally owned and operated plumbing company in the Seattle area, Raymark Plumbing & Sewer can often be found lending a helping hand in community events. Raymark recently participated in an Adaptive Reconditioning Program hosted by the Seattle Rugby Club.

The Adaptive Reconditioning Program took place in October 2020 and allowed Joint Base Lewis-McChord (JBLM) Soldier Recovery Unit (SRU) Soldiers and Veterans to participate in a painting class at the Starfire Sports complex. Sequoyah Burke-Combs, a Seattle Rugby player, was the instructor.

Adaptive Reconditioning refers to a variety of therapeutic programs allowing wounded, ill, and injured soldiers to engage in activities that support their physical and emotional well-being. Painting classes and other programs help the recovery of soldiers transitioning to both active duty and civilian life.

The painting class provided a much-needed relaxing event and environment for the soldiers.

It was a huge success due to the efforts of Kevin Flynn, of Raymark Plumbing and the Seattle Rugby Club, and Ryan Youngman of the Seattle Rugby Club.

?It was a really fun and relaxing experience,? stated Staff Sergeant (SSG) Matthew Nore. SSG Nore, a native of Wrangel, Alaska, never imagined how easy it was to paint. ?I surprised myself by painting this wave. I never thought I could.? The painting session produced beautiful pieces of art from all who participated.

Raymark Plumbing & Sewer takes pride in helping throughout the community with programs such as the Adaptive Reconditioning program.
