Anna Marie Jehorek sweeps readers away to the Emerald Isle with her latest novel, The House with The Georgian Door. Set in rural County Roscommon, Jehorek crafts a delightful tale of one woman's determination to overcome her past while starting anew.

Lead character Nora Fallon leaves her lucrative career in a London publishing house to return to her childhood home in Ireland. She purchases an old home, restores it to its former glory, and opens it as a bed & breakfast. Despite her enthusiasm for her new venture, her motives aren't strictly business. She's leaving London to abandon the man she loves but cannot have. As she strives to make the Cara Maith B&B a success, she pushes thoughts of one man from her mind as new and old friends appear ? complicating her life in Ireland.

Just as she's attempting to stand on her own, she's jolted by a series of unexpected events with the potential to jeopardize her happiness. Nora is forced to confront her past and deal with the news that will change her life forever.

Anna Marie Jehorek masterfully weaves a compelling tale that will have readers cheering for Nora's success, hoping she'll find love, and wanting to stay at The House with The Georgian Door.

Author Ann Marie Jehorek resides in Raleigh, North Carolina. Her love of writing paired with her passion for traveling to Ireland inspired to her pen her first novel, The Cottage on Lough Key. The debut novel was hailed as, "A wonderful Irish stew full of love, loss and emotional growth" and "A sensitive and well-related story of love lost and regained." In addition to writing contemporary women's fiction, she's also busy writing at her travel website, PullOverAndLetMeOut.com.
