December 22, 2020 -
Syphilis is a common STD that if left untreated, it can cause great damage to the body. The only sure way for a person to know if they are infected is to get tested. This is why Express STD Testing is offering an accurate syphilis test.

According to the site, ?Our testing centers use RPR or Rapid Plasma Reagin test which screens for the antibodies created by the body to fight the syphilis infection. If the results come back positive, the specialists will use the TPA test to screen the presence of the syphilis bacterium. It?s is a good idea to test for syphilis even if you do not have symptoms because the infection can exist without any obvious signs and symptoms. Our testing centers provide highly accurate test results that are approved by the FDA and have a 91% specificity and 95% sensitivity rate.?

About the test results, they said, ?The results will either be positive (reactive) or negative (non-reactive). If the test does not detect the infection, the results will be negative. If there are traces of the syphilis infection, the test will come back as positive. There will be a TPA confirmation after a positive result to correctly detect the syphilis infection. The best time to get tested is now. Knowing your STD status gives you control. If you have engaged in sexual activities with people whose statuses you did not know, you need to get tested. It?s a good idea to get tested after 4 to 6 weeks of potential exposure for accurate results.?
