Its in-house estimators claim to use the latest programs to provide prompt crane sizing, quotes, and permit expediting. To service different businesses? unique needs and budgets, the company says that they are always available to offer alternative lifting methods and equipment, along with cost-cutting suggestions.

The company?s field estimators make site visits, prepare site layouts, and meet with the client?s project team. They are available to consult with the client?s field staff in order to provide the appropriate equipment needed for any project. The company claims that its fleet is recently purchased, with an average age of three years, and up-to-date technology. It is well maintained through the use of daily logbooks, frequent inspections, and onsite mechanics. Depending on the requirements of the jobs, the company says it provides clients with the highest qualified operator that is specifically certified for the appropriate equipment needed on the job.

A spokesperson for the company, Gina Kaktis, says, ?Our entire organization?s commitment can be attributed to strong leadership and full support from ownership. Customers know that by choosing us they will have a stress-free experience, certain that their needs will be met and expectations exceeded. We remain a leader in the construction industry through our commitment to safety, service, and quality. We continue to have the highest safety records and recognitions as a direct result of our onsite safety training facility and our ?Talk Safety, Live Safety? culture. We house the most knowledgeable sales staff that is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week to answer any questions and perform same-day site reviews, with our customer?s best interest always in mind.?

Imperial Crane Sales says it has a variety of quality machines that will meet its clients? lifting needs whether they need new cranes or used equipment. For those who need equipment on a steady basis, they offer cranes for sale. If they are not available on hand, the company can procure the exact make and model required. For those businesses that can?t afford to buy, the company offers lease programs or ?rent to own a crane? programs. The company also specializes in aerial work platforms, telescopic forklifts, construction hoists, and boom trucks. The company carries and supplies parts from manufacturers such as Tadano, Barko, Link-Belt, Terex, Liebherr, Genie, and Elliott.

The claims to be an American success story that began with John Bohne, a simple, uneducated man who was the son of German bean farmers. In 1969, John Bohne bought a single 25-ton crane. In subsequent years, the company says that its straight-shooting and outspoken founder worked his knuckles raw to become one of the most powerful businessmen in Chicago, while also building what has become one of the largest crane companies in the world.

The company is a member of Isnetworld, Avetta (formerly known as PICS Auditing), PEC Safety, TRMA, HACS, and NCMS. The company boasts operated who are certified by programs such as IUOE (4-year apprenticeship), OECP, and NCCCO. The company has also received awards from the ASA, SC & RA, TRMA, NBIS, and CAF.
