Mites are insects that are related to ticks. Though most species of mites are harmless, some are parasitic and feed on birds and mammals. They are found on their bodies or in their nests and can be the cause of the spread of diseases in humans. Mites are capable of sustaining themselves without a host and can travel several hundred feet to find a new host to latch on to. They can adapt and survive in environments where the original rodent or avian host is no longer viable.

Rat mites can bite humans and can cause dermatitis similar to bedbugs. Those who are bitten may notice raised, red, itchy bumps on a specific section of their skin. Bird mites can also be the cause of many ailments such as frequent and intense skin itching, pinprick type bites that are with or without lesions, a vague and frequent sensation of crawling on the skin, bite marks, and lesions on the skin that tend to heal very slowly, increase of these symptoms in certain areas of the home, or increased incidence of symptoms at night and in humid weather. A physician may diagnose a person with the above symptoms with scabies but the treatment will end up not helping because that is not the root cause.

Rat mites and bird mites are found in the areas of the home which are closest to rat and bird nests such as apartment dwellers with nesting pigeons, people with pets or other animals that are infested, people who obtain used furniture, carpet, clothing, etc, that has been infested. This can also include guests of hotels, office workers, and others when the buildings are inhabited by rodents and nesting birds. Mites will infest carpeting, bedding, upholstered furniture, clothing, etc. They hide in cracks, crevices, and darkened areas in the home when not active. They tend to congregate where humans routinely are, such as near the computer, in automobiles, near the bed, etc.

A review of the company's service by Josephine W. says "Positive Pest Control is a very good company. I used their service for clothing moths treatment. The owner(Benny), General Manager(Leah) are knowledgeable, professional, responsible, patient, understanding, and prompt. No hassles at all, they provided follow up treatments during the warranty period. The issue I have(inside an imported box spring is infested) is so severe that I have to use a certified fumigation service with a different company. As a courtesy, Positive Pest offered a free treatment post fumigation. Highly recommended." More reviews from satisfied customers can be read at the business's GMB listing.
