September 17, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

First Plumber in Kensington, London, UK, offers an emergency plumbing website database that brings together those in need of a plumber with reliable, reputable plumbers throughout the London area. The company offers information on emergency plumbers in the UK, ensuring that consumers and businesses find a service that is trusted and vetted, and one that is located close to their location.

Tom Davis, owner and CEO of First Plumber, states, "We just thought it was time for something like this. People usually search for hours trying to locate a plumber in their area, or someone who provides emergency, after hours services."

The website database does the work for searchers, giving them a list of plumbers that meet their specific needs. They have compiled a list of accredited tradesmen, and only list those who have received positive feedback from their customers.

"You just never know who you are going to get when you do an internet search," observes Tom Davis. "You may think what you are getting is a qualified and reputable plumber, but in reality you may be hiring people who have no clue of what they are doing."

The site is based on various locations around the UK, and lists plumbers by service area. Users simply input their specific city or location, and they will get a list of companies that offer the services they need. First Plumber states that they list companies by area to make it easier for consumers and businesses to locate someone close to them, just in case they are in a plumbing emergency.

Tom Davis say, "If you have a leaky pipe and you are standing in water, then you certainly are not going to want to wait for someone to travel 100 miles to get to you."

Most service areas in the UK are listed, giving nearly every citizen and business access to a list of qualified and highly recommended services in their specific location. The database is growing with more companies being added as they are researched and verified.
