Popular spy pen recorder company, Ron's Amazing Products, in Catonsville, Maryland, has announced the launch of an entire new website. The company has had a website for quite some time but has recently changed the theme, which they state they believe is more attractive for customers.

Ronald Hoff, owner and CEO of Ron's Amazing Products, released this statement about the new site overhaul, "With our updated website features, we're hoping that our customers will have an easier time ordering our products. Customers will still have access to our chat feature and other ways to contact our customer service when needed."

Ron's Amazing Products is made up of products for health and personal care, as well as electronic gadgets. The company offers consumer products through their official website as well as on the Amazon marketplace.

"We've been doing this a while," states Hoff. "We just felt that perhaps it was time to grow our website to match our product line."

They have included a completely new color scheme as part of the website design change, in addition to a place for customers to sign up for the company's regular newsletter, which highlights changes and upcoming product launches.

The newly designed website also offers customers a place to log in and check on the status of their existing orders, a feature that Hoff says is very important to the company. "We know that a lot of people order online, and they want to know that they are getting their products in a timely manner. Our new account feature will enable them to check on their orders, make sure that they are shipping to the right address, and offers a number of other benefits that we hope our customers will enjoy."

Ron's Amazing Products consists of a management team with more than 25 years of experience in the product categories that are sold by the company. They state that they are consumers, who simply research and choose products that they feel will help other consumers.
