Rizzo understands that issues of family law are both legally and emotionally challenging. The team of lawyers make it a point to work towards making the process as efficient and straightforward as possible. An initial consultation will guide most clients in determining the best course of action for them. In other situations, clients may require support with an on-going child custody case. The firm's blog has several insightful articles as well as a detailed Resources Page that provides more accurate information to their community. No matter the legal situation one may be facing, the team of lawyers are ready to take on any case.

Divorce and separation cause some of the most complex and challenging family law cases. In San Diego, child custody issues include mandatory legal mediation around 6-8 weeks prior to the court hearing. A divorce attorney would serve as a guide in the mediation procedure. During the mediation, a counselor will offer both parties a chance to speak, and efforts will be made to resolve the dispute. The parties to the case may receive a recommendation on custody and visitation child custody law is highly dependent on the individual details of a divorce case. Child custody and visitation is then decided by a judge, or ideally through an agreement between the parents. Other factors which may be considered in a case include military orders, geographical relocation, sickness and financial considerations. Learn more here: San Diego Child Custody Lawyer.

There are several types of child custody which may be implemented in a case. Physical custody refers to the child's primary place of residence. In some cases, joint physical custody may be awarded. In this scenario, the child will spend equal or significant amounts of time with each party. In cases where the child resides mostly with one parent, that parent will be the custodial parent. Legal custody refers to the right to make decisions for and about the child. These decisions may include factors such as schooling, religion and medical care. This may be awarded to one parent or as joint legal custody as well. In some cases, parties may be awarded joint or sole (physical or legal) custody of a child. In cases which deal with child abuse, criminal, or drug or alcohol issues, sole custody may be awarded to a parent. In San Diego, courts often prefer to award joint custody in cases where both parties are considered to be fit caretakers for the child.
