The Chicago liquor license attorney has the knowledge and resources to help with almost anything, and one can rely on him to get whatever they need in a timely fashion.

O'Leary previously served as the Chief Legal Counsel of the Illinois Liquor Control Commission where he helped draft regulations, statutes and policies. He became a trusted source for businesses involved in direct to customer shipping. His work involves protecting clients' direct consumer business, and this has become a passion for Mr. O'Leary. He has seen great success protecting a number of business models before state agencies and now works with companies to develop business models that conform with state regulations while also being successful in the marketplace. He represents licensees in all three tiers and has saved several businesses whose licenses were subject to legal investigation by state agencies.

The Irish Liquor Lawyer also represents innovators in the liquor industry by lobbying on behalf of the wine and hospitality community. His involvement in helping businesses develop business models that meet complex regulatory requirements has made him one of the most trusted people in his field. He has and continues to play an important role in setting the direction and policy of the Illinois Liquor Control Commission.

Sean O'Leary, the Irish Liquor Lawyer, represents clients in all facets of the liquor industry, his firm's website states proudly. O'Leary Law and Policy Group represents clients that want to lobby for changes to highly regulated industries such as liquor and cannabis. Sean O'Leary is a registered lobbyist with the State of Illinois, and advocates on behalf of increasing DTC wine shipping options. Mr. O'Leary played a crucial role in making cocktails-to-go legal in Illinois. He was a major part of an advocacy group, Cocktails-For-Hope, which spearheaded efforts to pass legislation. His advice was sought in drafting the legislation signed into law. Mr. O'Leary also advocates for licensees in front of local governments. And advocates for expanding opportunities for hospitality business owners.

O'Leary attended the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and received his degree from Chicago Kent College of Law. He lives in Chicago with his wife and child. As a Chicago resident, he is greatly concerned about the law regarding sensitive substances like liquor. His work is primarily aimed at making the community a better, safer place for everyone, and he has enjoyed great success in this over the course of his career.

There are not a lot of blogs or publications that speak authoritatively on the legal aspects of the alcohol industry, says Tom Fark from Fermentation Wine Blog. It's a complicated subject that is rife with ideological, partisan and self-serving perspectives. O'Leary is threading the needle here nicely and is a very welcome addition to the sources the industry can use to educate themselves on the state of alcohol law. Irish Liquor Lawyer is highly recommended.

John G. Wilson of General Counsel, Winestyr, also has words of praise for the Chicago liquor attorney. He is quoted saying, "Sean navigated us through a very difficult legal process, and in doing so allowed us to expand our business and increase our revenue. Liquor laws are oftentimes difficult to understand and that is why Sean is a valuable resource. Additionally, his national network of connections gets you to the right decision makers and gets things done. We are pleased with the results and happy that we engaged him."
