Seattle Graphic Design, a newly launched graphic design company, is offering its services to clients worldwide. The company is offering services such as branding packages, logo design, website design, print media design, brochures, business cards, social media design, and swag design. The company is appealing to business owners to examine their current visual media strategy for its effectiveness.

The essence of graphic design is to visually communicate a brand's message as effectively as possible. It is important for a brand to have a coherent visual identity that helps create a sense of familiarity with its core audience. This can extend from something as widely used as the company's website to something targeted at a smaller audience like a business card. Principles of good graphic design are ubiquitous as brands spend billions of dollars every year to get the messaging just right for their customers. The global market size for graphic design was around $150 billion in 2018 and is expected to reach around $250 billion by 2022. This growth is fueled by a rise in awareness about the importance of good visual design. It is important, therefore, that all companies invest in good graphic design to compete in a market inundated by well-designed alternatives vying for the audience's attention.

There are many challenges that small business owners have to face when it comes to getting the most out of their graphic design budget. The first concern is hiring capable designers at affordable prices. Good designers don't come cheap but there is also a hidden cost of hiring an incompetent graphic designer. When design suffers it might turn off potential clients who are quick to judge the quality of a company's service based on first impressions. If the promotional material is not catchy enough, the company might lose out on a lot of business. It is therefore important to strike a balance when it comes to hiring a graphic designer. Seattle Graphic Design claims to offer small and medium business owners a reliable and affordable place to get their graphic design projects done.

There is also a lot of distinction between the work performed that unfortunately gets grouped together in the realm of graphic design. When it comes to website and app design, there must be someone on the team that understands UX design. When it comes to logos, visual aids, and banners, there is a need for artistic chops. It can be hard to understand this difference between domains for the untrained observer. This is the reason that an experienced team of graphic designers is required to deal with all the problems that a fledgling business might encounter. It is important to cover all bases for maximum effectiveness.

Working with an agency has another understated benefit of uniformity of graphic design output. When working with multiple freelancers it is easy to end up with resources that are disparate in their visual style. When there is no guiding force between the visual content strategy, it is easy to end up with a result that is muddled and that feels like it has been crafted by many different voices. This is counterproductive to a company's brand as it will lead to a loss of synergy and leave a bad impression on customers. Seattle Graphic Design recommends finding a company that offers an affordable service and then sticking to them for a length of time.

A spokesperson for the company says, "We started Seattle Graphic Design because we identified the need in the market for small businesses to have a unified graphic design strategy. Just because they work on a smaller budget, doesn't mean they can't enjoy the benefits of visual cohesion that working with an agency as ours brings. We are always willing to listen to our customers. We place their knowledge and expertise foremost and do our best to convey the value of their service to their customers.
