And because a tragic disaster such as a fire can occur at any time, they are ready to offer their restoration services, 24 hours a day and seven days a week.

"Your best bet for minimizing damage and cleaning up the mess as quickly as possible is to hire a qualified technician who is experienced in fire damage. At Excel Restoration, we have over 20 years of experience with electrical fires and smoke damage in homes and businesses," says Justin Parat, owner of Excel Restoration Service.

He adds, "We have the materials, equipment, and experience in order to restore and repair your building so it can go back to the way it was before the fire damage occurred. When we restore and repair your home or business, you can be guaranteed that you will be getting results that last so you can go back to living your life the way you've always had without your home or business being compromised. In addition to the restoration services, we will also help you with regards to the filing of an insurance claim so that it would be one less worry for you and the family."

Meanwhile, smoke damage restoration is an important part of their fire damage restoration services. This is because smoke damage is almost always present when there is a fire. However, smoke damage may be caused by several things, such as incorrectly ventilated equipment, and make happen even when there is no fire. Smoke may be able to travel through cracks and narrow openings of a house or building, causing damage to the structure.

The Excel Restoration professionals are well-trained in spotting various kinds of smoke. These are: dry smoke, which is caused by a quick burning fire at high temperatures; wet smoke, which is caused by a smoldering, low heat fire producing a pungent odor with smeary and sticky smoke that results into smoke webs that are more challenging to clean; protein smoke, which is nearly invisible smoke but has a very pungent odor and discolors varnishes and paints; fuel oil soot, which is produced by a furnace; and other kinds of smoke, such as fire extinguisher residue, fingerprint powder, and tear gas. Regardless of the kind of smoke damage incurred, they will be taken care of by Excel Restoration and thoroughly cleaned.

The fire damage restoration technicians from Excel Restoration have the experience, materials, and equipment to repair and restore the house or building back to the way it was before the fire damage or smoke damage occurred. They have also experts who can thoroughly inspect the various details of a house or building, including the structural and wiring integrity, ensure that the property is once again safe to live in.

The fire damage restoration services will also include cleaning of soot from the walls, ceilings, and surfaces. This can either be dry soot or oily soot. Oily soot will be more difficult to remove and will usually require the use of degreasing agents. Dry soot can be cleaned by using a vacuum cleaner. Soot cleaning is best left to professionals because they have the experience, the proper equipment, and the knowledge on how to do it.

Fire damage restoration will also include odor damage control. The source of the odor may be difficult to find and it will require experienced professionals to get rid of the odor. And finally, there is the rebuilding and reconstruction that may have to be done to restore the home back to its original form.
