?It?s something no one really wants to think about,? the article says. ?But as you get older, it becomes more important to make sure you leave as much as possible to those you leave behind at the end of your life. There are some common misconceptions about buying life insurance as a senior. Some people assume it must be ?too late? if you?re already over 60 or retired, or that it?s unaffordably expensive at that age. Fortunately, that?s not true. Affordable life insurance policies are, in fact, available to seniors, even those who have never held a policy in the past. Choosing a good seniors? life insurance company is important. There are quite a few companies out there offering different kinds of policies, including term life insurance, permanent life insurance and others. It?s usually a good idea to shop around and find a policy whose benefits and costs work for you.?

Life insurance over 50 usually involves getting ready for retirement and a good choice may be what is referred to as term life insurance. This type of insurance covers a policyholder specifically for a given and finite period of time. Terms are available in 5-year increments and can range from 10-30 years. This is the most affordable life insurance option. Unlike other forms of life insurance, term life insurance policies do not accrue additional value over time. Beneficiaries do, however, receive the full amount upon the policy holder?s death without being taxed on it. One can, if they decide to, convert a term life insurance policy into a permanent life insurance policy. This does not usually require the policy holder to undergo additional medical exams or meet other qualifications.

Another option for seniors is quality of life insurance, which prevents the holder?s family from being financially burdened by medical bills should the holder develop serious, costly medical issues toward the end of their life. These policies also allow for living benefits which provide financial aid to the policy holder?s loved ones.

Life insurance in one?s sixties or seventies is different, as serious health problems often begin to appear around this time. Some people prepare for this by converting their existing coverage into a universal life insurance policy. These are some of the most flexible policies which give one options for increasing or decreasing the benefit amount if they need to.

The article offers a number of other options for those looking for life insurance, including smaller, less expensive insurance policies ranging from $5,000 to $25,000. These are designed specifically for older adults and, while the coverage is less than other policies, one is all but guaranteed to be accepted even without any sort of medical exam.
