The period between January and June sees relative humidity in the Perth area climb up to about 63%; this provides the perfect conditions for mould to build up in our homes. The bathrooms and kitchens tend to suffer the brunt of mould infestations. These nasty infestations affect air quality and cause ugly stains, on surfaces such as tiles and grout. Whilst mould is relatively harmless, but when given the right circumstances, it can cause some irritation, especially to people who have pre-existing allergies or COPD or some respiratory condition. The spores can irritate your lungs' lining and increase your risk of asthma attacks or COPD exacerbation. This is why people affected by bathroom mould are most likely to experience runny noses, coughing and scratchy throats.

For this particular reason, guys at Electrodry are busy with an increase in uptake of their tile and grout cleaning services.
