February 25, 2021 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Cincinnati, OH. ? Cincinnati Plumber Skylar Halpin, the general manager of Halpin Plumbing, was recently featured on the cover of the February edition of Cincinnati Magazine. In the article, Halpin shares insights on how her job assists the community and how the pandemic has affected Halpin Plumbing. Halpin is thrilled to be highlighted among other industry leaders across the city.

Halpin is a third-generation plumber behind her grandfather, John Halpin, who founded Halpin Plumbing, and her father, Joe Halpin, who is the current owner of the company. Skylar joined her father at Halpin Plumbing in 2012 upon graduation from college. Since working at the company, Halpin has worked hard to earn her master plumbing license in the state of Ohio and is dedicated to seeing the company grow.

Cincinnati Magazine provides a definitive guide to living well in the Greater Cincinnati area. The magazine is the city?s most respected and award-winning publication, connecting with almost 160,000 readers every month. Halpin is featured in the ?At Work? edition of the magazine?s ?Work in Progress? section. The section focuses on interviewing owners from companies in a variety of industries regarding the effects of the pandemic on their position.

When asked in the article about the pandemic affecting her work, Halpin stated, "Luckily, we were considered essential. Other than not having as many calls periodically, we have been very lucky to stay open."

Halpin Plumbing is family-owned and operated and has served the Cincinnati community since 1951. The plumbing company offers both residential and commercial plumbing in a variety of services, including water treatment, sewer and drain cleaning, water softening, tankless water heaters, and much more. The February edition of Cincinnati Magazine can be found in stores locally or online.
