March 04, 2021 -
Fort Lauderdale, FL?When Tess reached out to The Source Addiction Treatment Center for help she was scared, pregnant, alone, and struggling with addiction. She had severed ties with her family and was desperate for help. Fortunately, she found The Source and was welcomed into just the kind of loving supportive environment she needed to heal.

?I came in after an unplanned pregnancy. I was scared and broken in every way possible. I had burned every bridge with my loved ones and desperately needed help. What I found far exceeded my expectation,? Tess said. The Source is an addiction treatment center in Fort Lauderdale that provides a compassionate, holistic, and personalized approach to recovery. They foster a family atmosphere of unconditional love in which clients and staff share in the joys and pain that are part of recovery.

The Source recently opened The Family Place, which operates under The Source umbrella, in order to expand its reach and ultimately be able to help more individuals overcome the disease of addiction. The Family Place is one of only a few treatment centers in the country that offers specialized treatment programs for pregnant women and mothers of young children. The Family Place is fully recognized by the Joint Commission and the Florida Department of Children and Families.

Many of the clinical and support staff at The Source and The Family Place are successfully in recovery themselves. Staff are able to share their own personal experiences, strength, and hope with clients. The team relishes the opportunity to work hand in hand with clients like Tess as they discover the joy and freedom that come from a life in recovery.

For Tess, mending broken family relationships was another vital part of her healing process. According to The Source, damage caused to family relationships can be one of the worst consequences of addiction, and addicts often worry that family ties have been broken beyond repair. Fortunately, most people, Tess included, are desperate to have their families back in their lives. Families are also eager to overcome the damage addiction has brought to their relationships once they know their loved one is getting the help they need.

Family therapy is an integral part of all levels of care provided at The Source. It?s not always easy, but evidence shows that people in recovery are far more likely to succeed when they have the support of their family behind them.

?They helped me rebuild broken relationships with my family, for which I will be eternally grateful, and let go of bad habits that were taking me out. Best of all gave me HOPE that change was possible. I have a new sense of purpose, my family back in my life, and newfound excitement for motherhood and the future I never thought existed. Thank you all so much.?

The compassionate professionals at The Source welcome anyone who wants to make a lasting change to reach out for help. For those who are struggling with addiction, contact them any time 24/7 at (800) 204-0418 to learn more.
