

Vox Security Limited Announce New Service For Fever Detection Screening

March 09, 2021

March 09, 2021 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Vox Security Ltd have recently announced a brand new service to help combat Covid-19 infections, the Gateshead based company have been offering fever detection screening. Alongside their usual emergency response for alarm systems and CCTV systems, the company has an array of additional security and safety services.

In light of the global pandemic Vox Security quickly adapted in order to train and be fully qualified to offer and install this fairly new technology. Fever screening works by using thermal cameras to scan a large number of people and can detect anyone who has a raised temperature.

?This is a game changer for businesses in order to keep their staff and customers safe from potential infection? said David, the owner of Vox Security ?This is a relatively new technology that we can use in all public spaces, such as offices, shops, schools, railway stations, or anywhere where a large group of people may be travelling to. The cameras can be set to detect a high fever and quickly alert you. It is a great way to inspire confidence in the general public and keep businesses open.?

Vox Security offer a range of Fire Detection Systems using Infrared Thermal Imaging Technology to the North East market. Their systems offer AI Detection that focus on human detection to help reduce false alarms, advanced algorithms to supply accurate measurements to 0.3 degrees with the Hikvision Algorithms, Bi-Monitoring for both thermal and optic images and an embedded audio alarm notify operators immediately, plus an Internet based thermal big data platform to optimise the user experience and improve work efficiency.

This new service is booking up quickly so it is best to book ahead for a free consultation to avoid disappointment.
