Positive Pest Control of NYC has a reputation for being able to handle any type of home or commercial property bug infestation. Among these is the great job that they do at controlling cockroach infestations. They have the knowledge and equipment necessary to quickly get any size cockroach problem a customer is having under control and eliminate the source of the problem to help prevent them from coming back. In the rare event that their first trip to a home or business does not take care of a cockroach problem, the company will happily do an additional treatment at no extra charge.

Benett Pearlman, founder and CEO of Positive Pest Control, says, "There perhaps is no more troubling pest situation that you can have around your New York City home or business than the sudden presence of cockroaches. That's because once you first start seeing them, you already have a big problem on your hands. These pesky insects have managed to stay around for millions of years because of how difficult they can be to kill and how quickly they can reproduce. That's why it's imperative that when you first notice cockroaches around your place that you call a pest control expert like us to come to help you out. It's the surest way to quickly eliminate and cockroach infestation at your home or place of business."

The company founder went on to say that several different species of cockroaches are found in New York City. The most prevalent of which is the large and hardy German and American cockroaches. He added that all species of cockroaches can survive for up to two weeks without food but they have a constant need for water. That's why their populations are usually centered around kitchen sinks, bathrooms, laundry rooms, and other places where moisture is easy to find. Pearlman says that they are not a pest that anyone wants around for long because they can contaminate food sources, spread disease-causing bacteria & microorganisms, and give the areas that they populate a very unpleasant acrid odor. They are also a bug that creeps many people out because they tend to be most active during the night and they will move all about a home or commercial building. The company CEO, who is also a former Regional Director of the New York State Pest Management Association, stated that he is very proud of the extreme amount of cockroach controlling knowledge and experience that he and his staff bring to this type of pest control work.

Reviews of Positive Pest Control of NYC's cockroach and other pest elimination services on their GMB Posts indicate a high level of customer satisfaction whether they are working for a homeowner or at a commercial business. This list includes their impactful bed bug, termite, moth, and flea control treatments. Pearlman added that they are also one of the most well-known rodent control experts in the NYC area and no mouse or rat problem is too big or too small for them to take on. They service many Greater New York City areas too such as Manhattan, Brooklyn, the Bronx, Queens, and the Upper East Side.
