A common misconception is that Coolsculpting is the procedure itself, but it is actually the brand name for a fat-freezing method that aims to get rid of stubborn fats. In fact, the real procedure is referred to as cryolipolysis, which literally translates into cold (cryo) fat (lipo) destruction (lysis). This is what experts use to reduce the volume of fat. In this procedure, professionals use cold temperatures to break down fat cells in the human body.

Cryolipolysis is acquired by customers who want to reduce certain parts of their body that have too much fat. Some patients actually undergo several procedures to treat more than one area or retreat the same area more than once to further reduce fat cells.

Back to 30 understands the frustration of having certain areas in the body that have stubborn fat that does not respond to diet and exercise. This problem has led the clinic to offer Coolsculpting to their patients. Back to 30 gives the public three reasons why they should consider Coolsculpting instead of traditional liposuction.

First and foremost, it is non-invasive. This treatment can be done without the use of needles or incisions, making it safer, more bearable and free from scarring and marks. Coolsculpting also does not take up a lot of time. In less than an hour, this treatment is finished and will not affect one?s daily routines as it has no required downtime. Last but not least, though it is performed quickly, it shows long-lasting results. With proper diet and exercise after every treatment, clients can maintain their body results for a long time.

Back to 30 prides itself in providing quality care and excellent customer service. They uphold six core values, each of which has helped them become the top-rated medical spa clinic in South Carolina.

First and foremost, Back to 30 uses the most up-to-date technology available. They do not settle for old equipment and only use the latest technology for all of their treatments and procedures.
