September 24, 2015 -
Blacksburg, Virginia based Cryptonomex has announced that they will be presenting at the upcoming Dublin Web Summit in November. The summit is scheduled to take place from November 3 until November 5, 2015. "We're honored to be invited and proud to be a part of such a huge collaboration of people in our industry," states Stan Larimer, spokesperson for Cryptonomex.

The Web Summit has become one of the most influential technology based events in the world, just four short years after its inception. The November summit will showcase more than 500 speakers and include 10 stages for a number of industries such as digital marketing, internet, enterprise, and builders. More than 2,000 startups from around the world have been invited to set up exhibits to showcase their work.

With more than 1,000 experienced investors, more than 200 satellite events, and around 800 tech journalists, the three day event is expected to make Dublin the tech capital of the world.

The 2014 event included more than 20,000 attendees, and had some rather big name executives from Google, Facebook, Microsoft and a number of Fortune 500 companies. This year's event is expected to top 30,000 attendees and will allow for networking with people who are shaping the technology of the future.
