According to OSHA (the Occupational Safety and Health Administration), every year over a 100 people lose their lives because of falling trees. Trees can become weak and become prone to breaking off during times of high winds such as thunderstorms, tropical cyclones, tornadoes, snow, and ice. For property owners, it is very important to check the health of trees because falling trees pose a direct danger to everyone who lives on the property. If there is an especially weakened branch or the entire tree is in danger of collapsing, the homeowner can take preemptive action to prevent a mishap.

Not everyone has the experience to spot hazardous branches and tree limbs. It takes an acute eye and an ability to perform risk assessment to spot all the problems that can arise. One has to be trained and have on-the-job experience to give an informed opinion. The technicians at Tree Commando are skilled in such assessments and can spot a potential problem better than those with an untrained eye. They are experts in spotting problems such as asymmetrical canopies, root rot, widow maker limbs, bark beetles, and many more other unseen threats. One can contact the company through the Tree Commando - Facebook page to get an assessment of their property if one suspects their trees might need pruning or removal.

Sometimes, precautions and preventative measures might not prevent nature from running its course. When high winds show up at a town's doorstep, the trees in the region might buckle and cause damage to property. Tree Commando can help in the aftermath of such incidences too. The company can ease homeowners' fears in stressful times by clearing the property of any excess plant matter and chopping down or pruning any damaged sections that might pose further risk. Tree Commando insists that prevention is better than cure and it encourages property owners to always try to schedule inspections in times of less risk to prevent untoward accidents when the weather goes bad.

Property owners who are looking to cut costs can also avail of Tree Commando's drop & chop or drop & chip services. First, the company will safely drop the homeowner's trees. After the initial step, the company will then give the homeowner a choice to customize the service. This gives property owners a chance to save some money and only use the level of service that they absolutely need. The company can drop & walk, drop & chop, drop, chop & stack, or drop & chip depending on the requirements. The company's knowledgeable staff always give their expert opinion when customers contact them to find out the best plan that suits their needs.

When asked about the company's approach to solving problems, a spokesperson for the company, Joe Harsh says, "We look at every tree and its potential for doing damage on a case-by-case basis. We understand that every property has unique circumstances that can play a role in causing problems. We account for poor weather and potential change in seasons when we give the homeowner our assessment of the trees on their property. We suggest the best strategy to move forward and eliminate the threat that comes from poor tree health. We use a combination of traditional and unconventional methods to bring down a damaged tree precisely without harming the surrounding property. Contact us today to find out why we are the best tree removal service in Fayetteville, NC."
