LOS ANGELES, CA - April 22, 2021 -

Huntington Beach, CA ? Like many cities and towns across America, Huntington Beach has seen a steady rise in addiction rates. Although Orange County, California is known as a beautiful and diverse area, there?s been a noticeable increase in the number of people in the Huntington Beach area that are struggling with addiction. Although the COVID-19 pandemic has contributed to this increase, there was also a marked rise in cases that began long before the development of the Novel Coronavirus.

The Fallout of Addiction is catastrophic. There are countless consequences of addiction that can impact people struggling with the disease as well as their friends and family members. For example, when a person is consumed by addiction, it?s not uncommon for their personal relationships to suffer. Often, addicts are so focused on getting and using their substance of choice that they no longer have any interest in other relationships. Loved ones may also decide to keep their distance because it?s painful to see their family member struggling under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

It?s important not to overlook the physical consequences of addiction. There are multiple long-term and short-term physical and psychological effects of addiction. In addition to diseases of the brain, liver, kidneys, a person with a drug addiction may also discover that they have issues with their blood pressure or heart.
