The Brown Firm has posted a detailed blog explaining special rules for compensation and liability for motor vehicle accidents involving children. The Brown Firms car accident attorneys website page is https://www.harrybrownlaw.com/car-accident-injury-lawyer-okatie-sc. The article on this website harps on the need to work with a skilled car accident attorney to maximize the child's chances of getting compensation to ensure a complete recovery. According to the car accident attorneys at The Brown Firm, there are key differences between a personal injury claim for an adult and a child.

Suppose a child is injured in a car wreck due to the negligence of other drivers. In that case, the child is entitled to compensation for things such as pain and suffering, continued medical care, current medical bills, chiropractic care, loss of ability to earn income in the future, and loss of enjoyment if they are seriously injured. The top car accident law firm states that a parent or legal guardian might be eligible for compensation for their financial losses, such as the ongoing medical expenses for their child and punitive damages.

The Brown Firm explains that punitive damages are reserved for severe cases in which the defendant was found to be extraordinarily reckless, willful, or negligent. Harry Brown, Jr. DC, JD, the managing attorney of The Brown Firm, says, ?One of the biggest differences between a car accident claim for a child and an adult is that even if the parties agree to a settlement, a judge can reject a settlement or even a verdict in a child's case.?

According to Brown, the courts have the child's best interest in mind and appoint a representative to analyze the case files and report whether the parents were focusing on upholding the child?s interests. Brown cautions that the court can dismiss the personal injury case entirely if parents are not working on keeping the child?s best interest. Urging parents or guardians to consult with an experienced car accident lawyer in Okatie, Brown agrees that mistakes can still happen, and the best attorney can come to their rescue in pursuing their personal injury claim.

The Brown Firm?s car accident attorneys are aware of the statute of limitations governing the state. They can guide parents/guardians to file an injury claim after an accident within the specified time.

A minor child cannot file a personal injury claim, and their parent or guardian must file the claim on their behalf. Brown explains that although the involved parties may want to wait for the child to turn 18 to file their claim, this is not the best option due possibility of losing crucial evidence.

The Brown Firm has earned a reputation for representing accident injury victims and getting them the desired compensation. The team of Okatie car accident lawyers understands the nuances of the law involving a child and can efficiently guide parents or guardians to file a compensation claim.
