

Carpet Cleaner in Panama City, FL Explains the Growing Popularity of Self-Cleaning Surfaces

April 27, 2021 -

Panama City, Fla. ? With the COVID-19 pandemic came the influx of new ideas to protect the public from germ spread. A carpet cleaner in Panama City, FL is discussing one of these protection tools that has gained much popularity throughout the pandemic.

A company called NanoTouch Materials produces self-cleaning surfaces that use nanocrystal technology. When this material is exposed to light, oxidation occurs, resulting in the self-cleaning process. This special material can be placed on any high-traffic touchpoint, such as a door handle, and it will begin continuously self-cleaning throughout the day while hands attempt to leave their germ-filled marks.

NanoTouch Materials was founded in 2012, but it was only recently that they grew drastically and had to undergo expansion, including duplicating their manufacturing equipment, expanding their shipping operations, hiring new employees, and allowing their executive management team to grow. A major factor that led to this growth was the COVID-19 pandemic.

CCS Floor Care is eager for the continual growth in popularity of this new material. In a public place, high-traffic touch points cannot be wiped down after each hand that touches them, so creating a way for these touchpoints to cleanse themselves throughout the day is a wonderful advancement in the sanitation of public places. Even after the COVID-19 pandemic becomes history, CCS Floor Care predicts that many of the new sanitation practices that arose as a result of the virus will continue on, including the use of this self-cleansing material.
