May 14, 2021 -
Rob Levine from Rob Levine & Associates Personal Injury Lawyers, a firm based in Providence, RI, is honored to have been part of Reading Week once again, with the fifth grade class at the G. Whiteknact Elementary School in East Providence. He joined the class via video chat to discuss topics of persuasion and advocacy in connection with the students? latest reading assignment. Some of the students had attended the class in person while others were virtually connected.

The students read the nursery rhyme, ?Who Pushed Humpty Dumpty Off the Wall?? by David Levinthal and with illustrations by John Nickle because April was Poetry Month. The story is about a detective who investigates whether Humpty Dumpty had really fallen off the wall by accident or somebody might have pushed him. The story stresses the importance of considering several perspectives to best understand a particular situation and the value of advocating for what one believes in.

Rob Levine explains, ?We tell our story from our perspective in order to persuade the reader to see it from our point of view.? Being a lawyer, he understands the importance of considering multiple perspectives of a particular situation. And he truly comprehends the art of persuasion, perhaps better than most because of his job as an attorney as he advocates for his clients. He encourages the students to passionately advocate for what they believe in and to not give up even when it is difficult to let someone comprehend their perspective.

In a new article posted on their website, the firm describes the participation of Rob Levine and the firm in Reading Week and notes how the students? persuasive writing skills were put to a test when they had to write the principal to petition for the installation of a Little Free Library on campus along with a request for the donation of 25 books to the school. Little Free Library is a non-profit organization that has the goal of increasing book accessibility throughout the community via its book-sharing boxes. The result of their endeavors turned out to be a success. The fifth grade class was able to get permission from the principal to have a book-sharing box from Little Free Library installed at the school.

The personal injury law firm of Rob Levine & Associates Personal Injury Lawyers has been providing legal services in Rhode Island for more than 20 years. Rob Levine has developed a reputation of being ?The Heavy Hitter®? because of his dedication towards assisting veterans and those who require Social Security disability benefits. The firm has expanded throughout the years and it has various locations, not just in Providence, Hartford, Boston, Fall River, and New Haven, but also nationwide.

People who have been injured in the Providence, Boston, Hartford, New Haven, or Fall River area can benefit from the services of the firm?s local attorney, who is ready to put up a legal fight on behalf of the victim against the insurance companies. Meanwhile, they are available nationwide for those who are fighting the government to get their Social Security disability benefits or their veterans disability benefits. Attorney Rob Levine has made it his priority to make sure that they will help the local community and people who require legal assistance after an injury.

The firm is ready to guide their clients through the process of seeking compensation for unintentional injuries and those resulting from accidents, including those that have long-term complications or even those that resulted in death. They advise accident victims not to delay their consultation with a lawyer because it is vital to preserve the evidence to build the client?s case. Those who have sustained a personal injury or were injured due to an accident are entitled to compensation from the responsible parties and the law firm can guide them with regards to their rights and how to file a claim.
