LOS ANGELES, CA - May 03, 2021 -

Costa Mesa, CA ? Costa Mesa is known throughout California as a beautiful and desirable area. But like many cities and towns across the country, Costa Mesa has also seen an increase in cases of alcohol and drug addiction in recent years.

The National Survey on Drug Use and Health reported that approximately 27.1 million individuals in the United States consumed some type of illicit substance in 2015. Since then, that number has only continued to go up. As a result, Costa Mesa residents find themselves concerned that their city and state is spiraling into an addiction crisis.

Addiction can and does lead to multiple negative consequences for the people whose lives it touches. Of course, the worst possible outcome is a tragic and untimely death. But substance abuse also leads to more emergency room visits, increased risk of developing serious long-term health conditions, and a greater possibility of people harming themselves or others while under the influence of drugs and alcohol.

Of course, addiction also impacts individuals in personal ways. It's not uncommon for addiction to destroy relationships and to take over a person's life so completely that they aren't able to perform the tasks required by their job putting their employment in jeopardy.

Unfortunately, many people struggling with addiction don't reach out. For some, they feel that substance abuse is something that they can manage themselves. Others believe that the best course of action is to reach out to a general practitioner that may not be specialized in the field of addiction treatment. It's strongly recommended that when a person is ready to overcome addiction, they contact an accredited alcohol and drug rehab center such as Muse Treatment in Los Angeles. Muse has experience helping residents of Costa Mesa transform their lives and find freedom from the devastation of addiction.

Addiction is a disease that no one should have to face on their own.
