Brain Health USA Center Discusses Benefits of Telehealth for ADHD, Insomnia, Bipolar Disorders and More

May 20, 2021

Van Nuys, California - May 20, 2021 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Brain Health USA Center, a comprehensive psychiatry and psychotherapy telehealth provider based in Van Nuys, California, would like to share some of the benefits of telehealth services for mental health. Especially with many areas of the country still in lock down and people still struggling to adapt to the lack of access to certain services, telehealth services are more vital than ever.

Brain Health USA Center's team consists of psychiatrists, psychologists, psychiatric mental health nurse practitioners and more that are fully qualified to provide mental health care services like psychotherapy and counseling, ADHD testing, initial psychiatric and substance use disorder evaluations, and follow-up medication management. In case of emergencies, the Brain Health USA Center team always recommends that a person calls 911 or visits the nearest emergency department.

The telehealth services provided by Brain Health USA Center are extremely accessible and cover a wide range of clientele. From children and adolescents to adults, families, couples and groups, Brain Health USA Center offers a variety of convenient psychotherapy and counseling options. Additionally, the Brain Health

USA Center team specializes in treating ADHD, anxiety, autism, bipolar disorder, depression, insomnia, OCD, PTSD and substance abuse disorders.

Anyone suffering from any of these disorders that has been unable to access mental health services due to the ongoing lockdowns caused by the coronavirus pandemic can also certainly benefit from telehealth services. While, as it states on the Brain Health USA Center's page discussing bipolar disorders, the standard treatments for disorders [are] medication and psychotherapy, the team at Brain Health USA Center believes in the philosophy that each person is different and each treatment is individualized.
