

Best Social Accounts Manager Celebrates Launch Of YouTube Channel

September 29, 2015

September 29, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

ProMediaAuthority, a San Diego, California based company, has announced the launch of their YouTube channel. The video in the YouTube channel is designed to show how their social media management services work. The company is also celebrating the launch by offering a discount on all of their services.

Andrew Stangl, spokesperson for the company, explains, "We wanted to show people that most social media management services are merely dashboards where they can manage their social accounts from one single location, and that we provide this service but in a much better way."

Aside from the usual dashboard, ProMediaAuthority can also create and then post social content, which is a feature that is often not found in many other services. The company offers a fully automated social media service that includes the writing and posting of content, as well as posting of images. Subscribers to the service also have the option to post their own content and images if they wish to do so. The company will also provide subscribers with metrics for all of their social accounts, so that they can see which posts are most popular, as well as demographics and other statistics.

The YouTube channel set up by the company is designed to give potential subscribers insights into the services that they are currently offering, showing examples of what automatically posted content will look like should they choose the service.

"They can also look at our Facebook page or Twitter feed to see what 100 percent automatically posted content looks like," states Andrew Stangl. "We want potential customers to see what the best social accounts manager looks like, which is why we've launched the video."

The company is inviting the public to like and share their YouTube video to receive a limited time offer of $100 off on any of the social media packages that they provide, using the special promotion code "pmafallsocial" at checkout.

ProMediaAuthority invites everyone to view their newly launched video to get an idea of the specific services that they can benefit from. More about the company, including specifics about their social media management packages, can be seen on their official website.
