LeDroit Park is a popular neighborhood in Washington, D.C. located immediately southeast of Howard University and northwest of Columbia Heights. Its borders include W Street to the north, Rhode Island Avenue and Florida Avenue to the south, Second Street NW to the east, and Howard University to the west. LeDroit Park is a neighborhood in Washington DC and is well known for its historic buildings. Expanding on the diversity, LeDroit Park is just minutes away from the Shaw?Howard University Metro station and offers many dining options.

LeDroit Park was founded in 1873 by Amzi Barber, a businessperson who served on the board of trustees for neighboring Howard University. Barber named the neighborhood after his father-in-law, LeDroict Langdon.

As one of the first suburbs of Washington, LeDroit Park was developed as a "romantic" and leafy neighborhood that differed from street names in other parts of DC. Developers spent money planting flower beds and trees to attract high-profile professionals from the city.

Dependable Homebuyers is now purchasing homes in the LeDroit Park neighborhood. LeDroit Park was founded in 1843 by Francis James Leaird as a refuge for free blacks, and many people contributed to its integration. Those interested in learning more can click here. Between 1886-1891, residents of the neighborhood fought intruders' efforts to purchase property adjacent to Howard University. With the opening of the streets, the park soon lost its former characteristics and became a part of the city with all its advantages and disadvantages.

The LeDroit Park neighborhood in Washington DC is located just Northwest of the city. This once-dominant African American community became a major focal point for their elite during the 1940s, when many prominent figures resided there. Griffith Stadium, which held both the Redskins and Senators was demolished in 1965 to make room for Howard University Hospital. Le Droit Park includes Anna J. Cooper Circle, named for the education pioneer.
