Termites are a common nuisance all over the country. They are responsible for damaging countless homes and properties, making them weak, dangerous, and uninhabitable for people. However, residents and business owners with properties in coastal cities like Virginia Beach have to be extra careful due to the region's proclivity towards harboring Eastern Subterranean Termites.

According to Orkin, 4 out of the top 5 cities in its Third Annual Top Termite Cities list are coastal cities. The presence of many coastal cities in the list is no coincidence as the local climate plays a huge role in the presence of the number of and type of pests that one has to contend with. Those looking for the best pest control services in Virginia Beach can hire Precision Pest Management to solve all of their termite problems. Property owners can read the company's reviews on Nextdoor and Google My Business to learn about the quality of its services.

Termite infestations start out small and can slowly erode the home or property from the inside out. Often times residents and business owners become aware of the problem when it is too late and the damage spills over to a visible area of the home or property. The best way to tackle this is to follow some common-sense precautions that can prevent termites from setting up a base in the building.

The first step that can cut down on the termite problem is to reduce excessive moisture in and around the property. This might be difficult in a coastal city like Virginia beach but a few possible actions are running the sprinklers so that they point away from the building, only filling up the pool if it is going to be used, and building water features away from the main structure. Another tip is keeping resources like firewood, lumber, and any other kind of wood that is going to be used as fuel for the fireplace, away from the home in its own shed. Termites most likely attack exposed wood and if it is close to the main building, they might migrate from the exposed wood to the main property. Finally, all trees and bushes should be kept at a distance from the home or property. If any plants are hugging the main building, they should be torn down or moved using an arborist's services.

A spokesperson for the company talks about its services by saying, "As we like to say, knocking on wood won't get you rid of termites.
