Washington DC - Dependable Homebuyers is proud to announce that they have opened an office in Washington DC's McLean Gardens neighborhood. Readers can learn more about the location at https://dependablehomebuyerswashingtondc.business.site/posts/1792912297225355019. Dependable Homebuyers was founded in Washington DC and is excited to be able to continue serving Washington homeowners from the new McLean Gardens office.

Located on the border of Northwest Washington, D.C., McLean Gardens is a residential neighborhood that offers convenience and security for residents to enjoy all-year long. From its tree lined streets in every direction to the close proximity of transit hubs, this community has it all.

McLean Gardens is a multi-acre housing development with more than 50 buildings and 1,000 apartments. Built in 1942, this temporary wartime housing project was converted to condominiums after the longest battle by residents for buyouts on record following their victory over developers when they were able to secure DC's largest resident group ever seen during that time period.

The Village at McLean Gardens was designed to be a community-focused environment, with townhouses and luxury apartments alike. This development met the needs of people who want an urban living experience without sacrificing all the perks of suburban life.

The construction of McLean Gardens began in the early 1980s with a rental section that eventually included both townhouses and luxury apartments. These units were registered as condominiums so they could be sold at a later date, but this time came when "Vaughan Place" was established in 2006.
