Trees provide many benefits like reducing heating costs in the wintertime as well as cooling temperatures during hot summer days, but they can be difficult at times as well. With their annoying limbs blocking sunlight or struggles against illness, trees can become a challenge for a homeowner to maintain alone. Citrus Heights Tree Service Experts can help remove those troublesome limbs so the beautiful yard gets all its sunlight back again. The company's tree service team can also help reduce pest infestation, which may damage these important plants even more than before.

Tree disease is difficult to recognize because often times they start from the inside of the tree. Some tree disease render a tree irrecoverable by the time symptoms of the disease appears on the outside of the tree. Some symptoms of some diseases include bark scaling, branch dieback, top-heavy appearance, lesions on the trunk, or fruit clusters.

A certified arborist may be needed if a tree owner has any questions or suspects their tree may be suffering from illness. Certified Arborists are trained professionals in identifying and treating tree disease.

Certified arborists can identify a tree's disease by examining the bark and leaves for visible signs and symptoms of disease. They also use different methods to diagnose the health of your trees including soil analysis, electrical conductivity tests, aerial imaging, and x-rays.

If tree disease were detected, a certified arborist would know if the tree could potentially be saved or not. They could recommend the solution to bring the tree back to a healthy state if the tree's health is recoverable.

Certified arborists are certified to carry out tree care work by an authoritative body. This is normally done through passing a series of exams, and having the necessary experience needed for carrying out this type of work. The certified arborist will be able to provide the tree owner with a report giving their findings following examination/inspection.

The arborists at Citrus Heights Tree Service Experts received their certifications from the International Society of Arboriculture.
