Richmond, VA - Dependable Homebuyers is excited to announce that they have published an article on the multiple ways to sell a home in Richmond. Whether one decides that one is ready to embrace change or is forced to change homes due to circumstance, Richmond, VA based Dependable Homebuyers offers advice to clients regarding the sale of their home. Today, the company is reaching out to their clientele to showcase five ways they can sell their property in the Richmond area. Learn more here: https://www.facebook.com/dependablehomebuyersrichmond.

The first suggestion that a company with baby boomers in mind would make is to list the house. This entails finding a real estate agent to work for you. Listing one?s home on the real estate market, in the agent or owner listed market, often means that one would need to renovate the house prior to sale. If the house is going to be shown to potential buyers in both markets, then one may need to update the interior and exterior of it. This does add the burden of being pressured to maintain a perfect home. The company also acknowledges that this may not guarantee the sale of the property at all.

The second option suggested by the company is FSBO ? for sale by owner. This is yet another means of selling property in Richmond, if it suits the client?s needs. The seller may retain the fee paid as commission to an agent, but many sellers find this transaction process complicated and may make costly errors due to inexperience. To avoid legal processes, it is important to learn the laws associated with real estate. Additionally, one may find it difficult to negotiate with potential buyers due to a sentimental connection with the property.

The seller will also need to have their finger on the market and must know how much they should charge for the home. Setting a price too high may lead to not selling the property because potential buyers might be deterred by concerns of potential issues with the property. Property owners with luxury homes who have difficulty selling them may want to consider owner financing. Condos, townhomes and single-family homes do not appeal to every prospective buyer. Instead of making potential buyers compete in a bidding war, this gives the property owner more control. For those under time constraints, this option may seem ideal, despite the risks. The majority of homeowners do not plan to become landlords in retirement, so while it may not be their first choice, it is still a viable plan. One may end up involuntarily owning the property again and must therefore put it on the market.

Rent to own is another way a person can sell his or her house. This allows the home to be rented with an option to buy it once the lease has passed. Once again, though not a guaranteed sale, it is another way for baby boomers to sell their homes. On the other hand, the owner must take the risk of still being held responsible for the property into account, should they decide to follow this route.

For those who want to sell their house quickly, one option is a direct sale. This usually takes place in less than a month's time (longer if the seller wants a lot of showings). Whether the property is listed with an agent or through FSBO, one must be aware of costs incurred for advertising or home maintenance. One tends to sell property that has been occupied for some time and is therefore not new property. This adds the additional cost of having a property appraisal done, and often comes with the cost of renovating. The company also advises clients to consider the time and budgeting that will be needed for repairs in order to calculate profit.
