For those who are under 35 and have been trying to get pregnant for a year or more, or those who are over 35 and have been trying for at least six months, CFI advises people to see a fertility specialist. A fertility doctor can help people find out why they might be struggling and offer the information or treatment that can help them conceive. However, it is vital to find the right fertility doctor for a particular person. The blog post can be accessed at https://capertonfertility.com/2020/12/09/how-to-find-the-right-fertility-doctor/.

Annemarie Henton, a spokesperson for Caperton Fertility Institute, says, ?Much like finding a great partner, a good job or the perfect pair of shoes, it?s important to weigh your options to find the right fit so you have the best possible experience. Our blog post offers some tips for how to find the fertility doctor that?s right for you.?

The first step is to look around to find out which fertility practices are available in or near the city or town of residence. The insurance provider may also know a certain provider and it is also possible to ask around for other patients and see whom they would recommend. It is also possible to search online and check out patient reviews.

Second, it is advisable to do one?s own research and actually get to know the doctors who are potential choices. It is a good idea to find out what services they offer, the training of the doctors, the office location, their business model, and more.

Third, it is vital to ask the fertility doctors the right questions and understand the various recommendations and options that are available for a particular individual, including the timelines and costs for the potential treatment plans.

Fourth, it is also a good idea to gain some knowledge about assisted reproductive technology (ART). ART continues to advance as a technology and success rates have been increasing. Thus, it is advisable to take a look at a practice?s pregnancy rates and live birth rates due to their fertility treatments.

Fifth, it is important to realize that fertility treatments can be costly. It may be covered by insurance but this will depend on the particular state. Various fertility clinics have different billing structures and payment plans. Some clinics may offer all-in-one packages while others will simply allow patients to pay as they go. It is advisable to clarify this with the provider before starting treatment.

Sixth, it is essential to comprehend the various services that a practice can provide, from medication to artificial insemination to in vitro fertilization to surrogacy.

Seventh, people may just need to trust their instinct or gut feel as to the fertility clinic that they can trust.

And finally, they may want to take a look at the services provided by Caperton Fertility Institute, which has clinics in Albuquerque, NM, and El Paso, TX. The CFI team is composed of board-certified ob-gyns and the only board-certified reproductive endocrinologist working and living in New Mexico. CFI?s team members have expertise and specialized training in all of the different aspects of fertility care, including artificial insemination, fertility surgery, IVF, and other fertility treatments. Whether people are just starting treatment or are already into more advanced technologies, they can custom-tailor the treatment to the patient?s specific needs, diagnosis, and circumstances.

During the patient?s initial consultation with Dr. Lee Caperton and Dr. Kelly Caperton, they will thoroughly review the patient?s medical, reproductive and treatment history and make individualized recommendations depending on the person?s unique diagnosis and on their experience in treating thousands of other patients. They will always ask the patient?s thoughts, questions, and feedback on their recommendations to make sure that they are approaching the treatment in such a way that the patient is comfortable and confident.
