A recent study showed that direct mail campaigns produce sales five times greater than email campaigns, whereas direct mail and email marketing campaigns get comparable response rates. Combining email with direct mail resulted in the best outcomes of all: sales six times greater than generated email alone.?

It has been noted that while young people receive hundreds of emails a day, they only get a few pieces of actual mail. Having observed that trend, digital-first companies such as Glossier and Warby Parker have begun opening physical stores to make themselves stand out from the crowd by sending physical mail.

Meanwhile, sending direct mail in bulk can be very cost effective for businesses and can be sent to very targeted groups of people. Through the use of a targeted mailing list, the business may be able to reach only those who are interested in the company?s product or service. Replica Printing can help businesses whether they have a mailing list or want to buy a targeted list. They will ensure that businesses will obtain the best possible ROI by running these lists through the approved mailing software of the USPS. This will eliminate duplicates, incomplete and non-deliverable addresses. It will also offer a move update and separates any internationals. This additional step will provide business with confidence that they are mailing to the appropriate recipients and get rids of any returns.

They can also help with direct mail marketing for nonprofits, which is the sending through the postal system physical mailings to supporters. While a number of non-profit programs have incorporated digital means of communication, direct mail is making a comeback as an important non-profit fundraising tool. This particular tool has been found to be provide a significantly higher investment return compared to digital approaches, with response rates that are sometimes 10 times that of the rates for digital marketing.
