Gil, a spokesperson for Avalon Home Performance LLC, says, "Insulation helps with your homes ventilation and air sealing which then make your home energy efficient. This in turn helps you save money on your utility bills. There are many types of insulation and we can help you choose the best one for the most savings."

Blown insulation is used to fill between current ceiling joists and wall studs to boost a home's insulation. This is important because the installation of batts insulation in existing homes rarely feasible. This is because this would require the tearing down of drywall, which is an expensive, time-consuming, and messy undertaking. On the other hand, blown-in insulation can be added to walls and to attics without hassle. Furthermore, this kind of insulation can be used to seal spaces and small gaps as it settles, filling in those gaps where outside air may be able to come in.

With the ever-increasing energy costs and fuel costs, homeowners and other property owners would want their homes or properties to have the highest possible energy efficiency. In addition, by using the appropriate home insulation, they can also substantially decrease their carbon footprint. Through the use of high quality insulation materials, homeowners can have a more comfortable home while ensuring that their energy costs are reduced. Blown insulation is a relatively low cost way of adding insulation to an existing home. When looking for blown insulation near me Mesa residents can call on Avalon Home Performance LLC.

The attic and basement are parts of the home where some gaps may be found that allow outside air to get in, thereby reducing the energy efficiency of the home. Spray foam insulation may be used for boosting the insulation of the attic or basement. The spray foam to be used should be of high quality. This means that it should be as thick as cardboard, and it should be capable of sealing holes or gaps and prevent moisture from going through. The R-value of the material is important, such that it is large enough to effectively function as a barrier to the flow of heat. This means that it can effectively prevent cold air from coming into the home during the cold months and in preventing hot air from getting into the dwelling during the hot months. Having a reliable home insulation provider like Avalon Home Performance LLC ensures that the most suitable insulation is installed for the home.

It should be noted that blown insulation is a bit different from spray foam insulation. Blown insulation means a certain type of insulation material is blown or sprayed into attics, wall cavities, and floors. Spray foam insulation uses spray-on polyurethane foam that expands to fill voids and gaps to ensure a tightly sealed insulation. Spray foam insulation is usually preferred because it can virtually get rid of air infiltration. However, its installation requires higher skill training. This is ensured by the experience and skills of the professionals from Avalon Home Performance.

Aside from insulation, Avalon Home Performance LLC also provides exterior painting services and sunscreens. Exterior painting is important because it enhances the curb appeal of a home. Solar screens offer various benefits, such as: reduction of cooling costs by as much as 25 percent; improvement of the exterior of the home; increase in daytime privacy (with excellent outward visibility); protection of furniture, carpets, and blinds from fading and UV damage; dramatic increase in the comfort level in the home; and availability in six different colors of frame and screen.
