Louisville, Kentucky ? After being invited by several homeowners to handle trimming on fruit trees during their production phase, Louisville Tree Service Experts decided to educate homeowners on the best time to trim their fruit trees.

Talking to the fruit farmers during a recent agricultural meeting, the Louisville Tree Service Experts CEO had the following to say, ?When planning tree trimming for fruit trees, it is essential that we time it in seasons when the trees are not productive. This helps you avoid damaging your fruits while removing branches from the tree.?

The company?s CEO noted that most fruit trees stop producing their fruits in the fall season as they get ready for the winter season.

?After handling tree maintenance services in Louisville for the past 25+ years,? said the CEO. ?One thing we have learned is that trees in this region ? including fruit trees ? become dormant in the fall. This is the period when their leaves become colorful before dropping. As such, the best time to invite our fruit tree trimming team Louisville to your fruit farm is in the fall.?

The CEO noted that there are times when trimming may be needed when the tree is still in the production phase. He mentioned if the tree has damaged branches that are lying on productive branches, removing these branches early in the tree?s production phase may encourage the tree to be more productive.

Operating in the city of Louisville and suburbs like Indian Hills, Crestwood, Windy Hills, Northfield, Hurstbourne, and Anchorage, Louisville Tree Service Experts is a company that is equipped to handle all types of tree care procedures.
