

Concepts Of Spring Announces Use Of Neodymium Magnet Technology for their Baby Proofing Safety Locks

October 22, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Concepts of Spring, a company based in Elkhart, Indiana, has revealed that their baby proofing safety locks under their Spring Safe & Sound brand, are made with Neodymium Magnet Technology. The company said that the reason for using this type of technology is the consistency that these magnets provide. Neodymium magnets are the strongest type of permanent magnets that are available commercially, and when it comes to child safety, the company feels that this is an important consideration when looking for the right type of magnet to manufacture their child safety locks.

"I think that most parents understand the importance of baby proofing their homes. Child safety is crucial in lessening many of the child-related accidents that happen, and with just a bit of common sense and the right products, it can be implemented quite easily," says Eva Galvez, spokesperson for Concepts of Spring. She pointed out that cabinets pose one of the highest risks of danger to children, because of the types of objects that can be placed inside them, such as poisonous substances and sharp knives.

The Spring Safe & Sound Magnetic Locks set is made up of 8 Locks + 2 Keys and is the company's solution to keeping children safely out of cabinets. Once the Spring Safe & Sound Magnetic Locks have been installed, they are completely invisible to the eye. The doors will automatically lock when they close, which means that parents never have to worry that they forgot to lock the cabinets. They are also easy to open by using the special keys, which parents simply need to place against the cabinet door where the lock has been installed on the other side to open it.
