Any commercially used building requires regular maintenance to ensure that it runs smoothly and has an aesthetically pleasing appearance at all times. Commercial building maintenance involves making sure that all surfaces in the building are properly painted and looked after. Adam Roe Painting understands how difficult it can be to preserve a commercial building in this manner and knows that scheduling regular painting is one more important task on the owner's plate. To quote the company, "Why not leave that to Adam Roe Painting?"

The company offers customized programs to meet each building's specific needs. When a client enrolls in the Adam Roe facilities maintenance program, they may feel like the building has an additional staff member who has the sole task of helping keep the building looking great. A business's employees and customers are sure to notice the effort as well. Learn more here: <https://www.facebook.com/adamroepaint>.

The company takes a hands-on approach to paint maintenance. The Adam Roe Painting team provides an authentic, reliable and professional approach to all of their clients' unique maintenance needs. The company has plenty of expertise in all types of facilities, including hotels, corporate buildings, offices, medical facilities, food preparation facilities and industrial buildings. They make it a point to listen to the needs of each of their clients and provide the type of detail-oriented services each member of their community needs and expects. When a client signs up for the Adam Roe Painting facilities maintenance program, the client will then get a professional painter dedicated to their site. Each of the professionals assigned is managed by an experienced project manager who will monitor and track all ongoing projects. The project manager will also be the client's point of contact for updates (or if they need to discuss any issues).

Understandably, quite a few businesses would require maintenance to be completed during non-working hours. The Adam Roe Painting crew is proud to acknowledge that they remain flexible, arranging to work around facility shutdowns and on nights or weekends if necessary. There are many benefits to regular painting maintenance. Keeping a commercial building painted offers advantages over and above only aesthetic improvements. Some of these benefits include protection from fading, cracking and peeling due to exposure to the weather and the elements. Regular painting extends the lifespan of painted and coated surfaces and reduces the preparation needed for each paint job, which is both time and cost efficient. Regular maintenance would also increase the property value and portray a positive image to tenants, customers and employees. An important benefit is that it will also prevent the building from being non-compliant with building and safety regulations, which may result in fines if not upheld.

Owing to the fact that all facilities have their own unique needs, Adam Roe Painting offers multiple service plans and contract work to choose from. Every program is customized according to a given commercial building's schedule and budget. The team always begins by touring the facility with the client to determine their painting needs within the available budget. They then discuss preferences upfront and document them in the contract. The painters assigned to any facility are fully trained and experienced in commercial and industrial painting techniques. They are also equipped with the required uniform attire and protective gear.

Adam Roe Painting has been in the business since 1985 and has helped hundreds of facilities managers keep their buildings painted. The company is a local commercial painting contractor and are fully licensed, insured and bonded for their clients' protection. The company also offers custom color matching, a residential exterior warranty of 5 years, and a 1-year warranty on commercial and industrial projects.
